- Reflections Dashboard: Weekly/monthly summaries using soft language, not data-heavy charts
- Today's Invitation: Daily emotion-based journaling prompt (personalized via mood trends)

- The Quiet: Public feed of anonymous emotional entries
- Whisper: One-word responses (e.g., “same”, “peace”, “ache”)
- Echo: Tap to show “I felt that too” — no numbers, no metrics

Suggested Add-On:

☒ 4. Social-Alternative Features (from “Community Interactions”)

☐ 5. Navigation / UI Language (from “Navigation & Features”)

Core Features:

- Sanctuary as the Home: Always soft, personal
- Stream: Public journal feed
- Seek: For emotion or keyword search
- Selfscape: Minimal, private user profile (no photos unless user chooses)

Suggested Add-On:

- Inner Compass: Custom settings for emotional reminders, language tone, and privacy

 6. Emotional Wellness Tools (from “Emotional & Wellness Tools”)

Core Features:

- Inner Weather: Mood tracker visualized like a soft calendar (sun, clouds, etc.)
- Gentle Nudges: Timed prompts or affirmations based on user's journaling habits
- Heartbeats: Journaling streaks without pressure (optional)
- Feelings: Emotion-based hashtags, with gentle colors and icons

Suggested Add-On:

- Mood Replay: Option to “replay” a previous journal with current perspective

---

 Final Recommendations:

1. Let all features serve the inner life. Avoid gamification. Let users feel peace, not pressure.
2. Avoid numbers in public spaces (likes, views, follows).

3. Use Lexicon for every element, from button text to microcopy and tooltips.
4. Emotion-first design should lead both UX and content: every interaction should feel human, not mechanical.

🛠 Instructions for Developer: SoulScript UI Lexicon Map Integration

1. UI Label Replacement

- Replace all standard UI terms (like “New Post”, “Like”, “Comment”, “Feed”, “Settings”) with SoulScript’s emotionally resonant terms.
- Example:
  - “New Entry” → Begin or Unfold
  - “Comment” → Whisper
  - “Like” → Echo
  - “Feed” → Stream

Use the lexicon as the master naming convention across:

- Buttons
- Navigation
- Tooltips
- Alerts
- Prompts
- Micro-interactions

2. Back-End & Codebase Naming

- Reflect these terms in variable, function, and class names where possible to ensure long-term consistency and easier collaboration with the content/design team.
- Example:
  - `submitEntry()` → `releaseUnfolding()`

- likePost() → sendEcho()
- userProfile → selfscape

3. Modular Lexicon File

- Create a centralized file or component that holds all the lexicon labels (can be a JSON or language constants file).

- This will make it easier to:

- Translate in the future
- Edit or A/B test naming
- Reuse across app/web versions

4. Design System Integration

- Collaborate with the design team to ensure these terms are used in Figma, mockups, wireframes, etc.

- If the design system uses tokens, map Lexicon terms to component tokens.

5. Fallback Naming (for logic)

- Use standard/internal names where needed in back-end or DB logic, but always surface SoulScript terms in UI/UX.

- e.g., in DB: comments → UI: Whispers
- e.g., in DB: public_feed → UI: The Quiet

6. Developer + Content Workflow

- Whenever a new UI element is added, check the Lexicon Map first before naming it.
- Collaborate with content/copywriter to ensure naming is consistent with the tone of SoulScript (gentle, soulful, safe).

7. Maintain Emotional Integrity

- Treat this lexicon as core to the user experience, not just language.
- Every term should evoke calm, trust, reflection, and emotional safety.

The final staff should be something like a refined SoulScript UI Lexicon with emotionally expressive, original names for all key features—designed to avoid cliché, deepen user connection, and maintain SoulScript's unique tone.
